"I still see a chance of us getting elected, and I believe there is space for non-establishment voices in Legco." (SCMP, Sep 20)

HK elections: 4'000 police officers to ensure smooth polls on Sunday

In the first polls to be held under the new electoral system aimed at ensuring only "patriots" can hold political power, kicking off this Sunday, there has been a record number of uncontested seats. Only 364 seats will be decided upon as the remaining ones failed to attract enough candidates or were reserved for ex officio members. The number of registered voters in total has been slashed by 97 per cent, from 246,440 in 2016 to 7,971 this year. Hong Kong police are not taking any chances and plan to deploy at least 4,000 officers to ensure smooth and peaceful polls for the powerful Election Committee on Sunday. All eyes on the only two opposition candidates, new polling station technology and which of the state leaders will take top roles. Prior to the election, Beijing has sent a clear message to hundreds of tycoons and ultra-loyalists who were taking their seats without contest to take to the streets and connect with the public.
